2026: Global War on Humanity Escalates

The Philosophical Foundations: Epiphany and the Twilight of the West

The arrival of the year 2026 marks a significant historical juncture, characterized by what is described as an "Epiphany" in the global landscape. Drawing upon Hegelian philosophy, the current era is defined by the notion that rationality and historical momentum are increasingly emerging from the East, paralleling the rising sun. Conversely, the Western world is viewed as being in a state of "twilight," a period of darkening and decline where the traditional structures of power and reason are beginning to falter. As the "owl of Minerva" flies at twilight, the wisdom to understand this historical cycle often arrives only as the era itself draws to a close. This transition is not merely a political shift but a profound philosophical movement where the "sun" of global influence is setting on the West while rising in the East.

Reviewing the Global Conflicts of 2025

As 2025 concluded, it left a legacy of systemic violence, humanitarian crises, and a perceived global war on humanity. The preceding year was defined by several catastrophic events:

- The Gaza Genocide: This conflict is identified as the most outrageous story of the period, with reports suggesting that the Zionist regime’s "war on children" resulted in the deaths of as many as 300,000 Palestinian children.
- The Conflict in Sudan: This crisis, though less discussed in mainstream media, is attributed to the influence of specific regional actors, including interests from the Emirates and Israel.

- Nuclear Brinkmanship: A near-nuclear conflict between India and Pakistan further destabilized global security.
- Economic and Humanitarian Disasters: Widespread military aggressions and humanitarian crises triggered a surge in anti-war and anti-genocide protests worldwide, alongside the rise of prominent political figures opposing these trends.

The speed of these historical developments is captured by the phrase motus in fine velocior, indicating that historical events tend to accelerate toward the end of a cycle. This acceleration is moving toward a crisis of unprecedented proportions, which some observers describe as a total systemic breakdown.

The Venezuelan Intervention: A Geopolitical Crisis

In early 2026, the United States military intervention in Venezuela emerged as a critical flashpoint. Reports indicate that the U.S. launched significant bombing raids on Caracas, followed by the "kidnapping" or abduction of President Nicolás Maduro. This action has sparked a deep ideological debate regarding the legitimacy of the Venezuelan government and the motivations of the U.S. administration.

The Debate Over the Bolivarian Revolution

Analysis of the Venezuelan situation reveals a stark divide in perspectives. One viewpoint argues that the Bolivarian Revolution, initiated by Hugo Chávez, effectively "wrecked" the nation's economy and destroyed its oil industry through communist policies, leading to a "hollowed-out" state. From this perspective, the current vulnerability of the Maduro government is an "Achilles' heel" resulting from internal mismanagement and the suppression of the middle class.

Conversely, an opposing view contends that Venezuela’s economic difficulties are the direct consequence of a sustained American economic war. This perspective characterizes Chávez and Maduro as "Christ-like figures" who stood for the poor against "Yankee psychopaths" and corporate parasites. This stance emphasizes the history of U.S. bullying in Latin America, including past genocidal actions in Guatemala and El Salvador, and suggests that the Venezuelan people will mount a protracted guerrilla resistance in the country's favorable jungle and mountainous terrain.

Strategic Motivations: Oil vs. Palestine

While the U.S. administration often cites drug trafficking or the protection of democracy as justifications for intervention, the sources suggest deeper geopolitical motives. Although Venezuela possesses vast oil reserves and has historically been open to trade deals, the intervention is also attributed to the Maduro government’s vocal support for the Palestinian cause. Furthermore, the intervention is seen as an act of desperation to protect the U.S. dollar and the national debt, which has become the third-largest item in the federal budget. By engaging in dramatic foreign military actions, the administration may be attempting to stave off a domestic currency collapse.

The Struggle for Information and Free Speech

The global war on humanity is accompanied by an "epistemological war" regarding the control of information and the suppression of dissent. In the West, there is a perceived erosion of the First Amendment and traditional notions of freedom.

The Targeted Suppression of Dissent

Evidence of this crackdown is seen in several jurisdictions:

- The United Kingdom and Scotland: The authorities have begun arresting individuals for merely holding placards in support of "Palestine Action," a group that engages in direct action against military contractors. The UK is described as "doubling down" on a "doomed project" and behaving with a zeal that mirrors the loss of a moral reverse gear.

- Switzerland: Traditionally a bastion of neutrality, Switzerland is accused of total corruption and capitulation to outside influences. The freezing of the bank accounts and passports of retired military officials, such as Jacques Baud, is cited as proof that Switzerland has abandoned its neutrality and is essentially functioning as a "bank masquerading as a country".
- The First Amendment in the U.S.: Prominent figures and billionaires have increasingly called for the elimination of the First Amendment, marking a departure from previous decades when it was utilized to promote secular and liberal agendas.

The Collapse of the Zionist Narrative

The sources argue that the Zionist regime has lost the moral credibility it once gained from the historical memory of the Holocaust. This shift is attributed to the viral spread of media documenting the violence in Gaza, which has neutralized the regime’s ability to control the global narrative. Consequently, labels like "Anti-Semite of the Year"—which have been applied to figures such as Tucker Carlson and YouTuber Miss Rachel—are increasingly viewed as "badges of honor" rather than effective tools of social ostracization. This loss of narrative control is seen as a sign that the current regime is in its final, desperate stages of self-destruction.

The Domestic Crisis: Epstein, Scandals, and Distraction

The aggressive U.S. foreign policy in 2026 is interpreted by some as a "Wag the Dog" strategy—a calculated effort to distract the public from significant domestic scandals. A primary source of pressure on the Trump administration is the release of the Jeffrey Epstein files.

The Impact of the Epstein Files

Reports indicate that Donald Trump’s name appears with high frequency in the Epstein files, third only to Epstein and Ghislaine Maxwell. The files allegedly contain witness testimony regarding Trump’s involvement in serious crimes, including the rapes of minors and his presence during the alleged murder of an infant. Critics suggest that the military "fireworks" in Venezuela and the abduction of Maduro were timed to bury these revelations and divert the media cycle away from Trump’s personal legal and moral vulnerabilities.

Economic Inequality and the Wealth Tax

Amidst these scandals, the U.S. faces a systemic economic crisis where trillions of dollars have been transferred from the middle class to the top one percent. To address this, a "wealth tax" has been proposed, based on the principles of St. Thomas Aquinas. This proposal argues that wealth gained through usury—which is described as theft and the opposite of labor—should be expropriated for the common good. This economic strategy challenges the "Jewish fables" of capitalism that protect unproductive capital over the welfare of the working population.

Global Tensions and Assassination Attempts

The geopolitical climate of 2026 is defined by a state of "lawless attack" and "reckless abandon". A major incident occurred with a reported assassination attempt on Russian President Vladimir Putin involving dozens of kamikaze drones targeting his state residence. While the U.S. and Ukraine denied involvement, the incident occurred while President Trump was negotiating with President Zelenskyy and keeping Putin on hold, leading to allegations of U.S. complicity.

Russia has signaled that its response to such provocations will not be diplomatic. Analysts suggest that if the West continues to cross "red lines," Russia may be forced to utilize a "brushback pitch" strategy—such as the targeted, pre-announced destruction of a NATO facility—to shock Western leaders into sanity and prevent an all-out nuclear exchange. The playing of "Swan Lake" on Russian doomsday radio channels is noted as a chilling traditional signal of a state crisis and potential imminent conflict.

Religious Realignment: The Catholic-Muslim Alliance

As traditional Western political and social structures fail, the sources propose a new spiritual and geopolitical realignment: the Catholic-Muslim Alliance. This concept argues that the historical conflicts between the two faiths, such as the Siege of Vienna, are now obsolete. Instead, traditionalist Catholics and Muslims are seen as sharing a common enemy in the "Zionist Antichrist" and the "Satanism" that is described as the "hidden grammar" of the Anglo-American power structure.

This "Satanic" influence is traced back to the Protestant revolutionary fringe and literary influences like Milton's Paradise Lost, which allegedly shaped the worldview of the American founders. The proposed alliance seeks to move beyond the materialism of both capitalism and communism to establish a society focused on the common good and the return of the Messiah.

The Shift in Local Politics

The rise of this alliance is exemplified by the election of Zohran Mamdani as the Mayor of New York City. Sworn in on a Quran, Mamdani has already taken steps to reverse executive orders that conflated anti-Zionism with hate speech, signaling a move toward a "socialist American identity" that appeals to both Muslims and those disillusioned with the capitalist status quo.

Conclusion: The Speed of the End

The current state of affairs in 2026 is defined by "Calvinistic predetermination," where the U.S. and its allies appear to be pursuing a "death wish" through reckless interventions and the abandonment of the rule of law. The acceleration of events—from the invasion of Venezuela to the brink of war with Iran—indicates that the global order is nearing a final breakdown. As the doomsday clock in Tehran continues to tick down toward the predicted demise of the Zionist entity, the world remains in a state of high-velocity transition where the sun has set on the old order and a new, uncertain era is emerging from the East.

The sources conclude that navigating this "twilight" requires attention to the big picture: a regime that is destroying itself through its own desperation and the inevitable pushback of humanity against a global war on its very existence. Regardless of the outcome of these specific conflicts, the year 2026 stands as the point where the "fragile religious and political bubbles" of the past century finally burst.
